Julius, a cartoon cat, is an ice-man, with a wagon and a horse, Becky. In front of a customer's house he weighs off a piece of ice and upon finding that it does not weigh enough he fixes the handles of the scales to read according to the correct weight. He then puts the cake of ice on a mouse's back and climbs up on the ice. The maid opens the door and bids Julius bring the ice in. Before doing so, however, he and the fair one indulge in some love-making and when the maid bestows a kiss on Julius's fair brow, he leaning against the ice, causes it to melt. Alice, the mistress, comes out and separates the maid the Julius. Julius starts to shiver and a cake of worms over his head. He reaches for it with his tongs and departs.

In the meantime, Becky had wriggled out of her harness and from a suspicious looking bottle in the wagon she takes a drink which causes her to become intoxicated.

Julius and the maid had planned to elope. He appears at the side of the house and whistles. Down comes a handbag from the window. As he reaches for it a batch of trunks following bury him. He finally crawls out and squirts a stream of water up to his lady friend's room and she slides down on it.

The run off to the wagon and have an exciting time trying to get drunken Becky to budge and after several amusing scenes finally get her going. Alice sees them and screams for them to stop. She runs after the wagon and a cop runs after her. Julius and the maid run into a church where the knot is tied. Alas, Alice and cop have arrived too late.
